ASPHER
The Association of Schools of Public Health in the European Region
GLOBAL NETWORK
FOR ACADEMIC PUBLIC HEALTH

This edition coincides with a critical juncture for our world. The COVID19 pandemic and conflicts worldwide have indelibly altered our planet and our lives, exacerbating existing inequalities and alerting us to the threats of an unsustainable mode of production. We have also failed to mitigate the effects of climate change with environmental disasters growing in frequency and impact. Now more than ever, these crises serve as an opportunity to advocate for and create better social protection systems, promote health for all, prepare for the challenges posed by future pandemics or global crises, and work together to end exploitation and to create harmony between nature and humanity.
